In response to a sold-out screening on April 29, It Runs in the Family, the comedy shot in Cleveland in 1993 under the title A Summer Story, will return to the Cleveland Museum of Art for one more showing at 4:00 pm on Sunday, May 21. The screening will take place in the Museum's Gartner Auditorium, 11150 East Boulevard in University Circle. Admission is $4, $3 for CMA members, $2 for children 12 and under.

It Runs in the Family is a follow-up to the popular 1983 film A Christmas Story, also shot in Cleveland. Both movies are based on the writings of humorist Jean Shepherd. It Runs in the Family is set in the 1940s, during the summer after the events of the previous film, and stars Charles Grodin, Mary Steenburgen, and Kieran Culkin as three members of the Parker family who here engage in such fair-weather activities as fishing, spinning tops, and battling the hillbilly family next door. Clevelanders may recognize their neighborhood or even their neighbors on screen; much of the movie was shot downtown, in Tremont, and at Playhouse Square.

It Runs in the Family was directed by Bob Clark; it runs 85 minutes and is rated PG. Tickets will go on sale after 1:00 pm on May 21. (A second movie, John Ford's 1956 western The Searchers starring John Wayne, shows at 1:30 pm on May 21. A separate admission is required for that film.)
